SIX NEIGHBORHOODS One Vision

MID-NORTH QUALITY OF LIFE PLAN | INDIANAPOLIS | EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This is the first time that all of our neighborhoods have been involved together in a planning effort on this scale. We see this plan as a key moment in the forward progress of our community.

NEIGHBORHOOD +Opportunity

Dreams will power the growth and rebirth of the neighborhoods, and the community will provide the comprehensive resources necessary to be a neighborhood of opportunity for all.

- + New housing options for all ages and backgrounds
- + Improved transportation connectivity
- + Trails, art, parks, gardens, and wellness options
- + Commitment to youth, education, and family learning.
- + Promoting business and entrepreneurship

communicate +Connect

Through the synergies of sharing information, celebrating assets, and building a shared identity based on neighborhood values, the neighborhoods of Mid-North will continue to achieve success and be recognized as a special place to live, work, learn, and visit.

- + Inventory, promote, and celebrate assets
- + Continue momentum with cross-neighborhood collaboration and initiatives
- + Building a shared identity based on neighborhood values

destination +Fall Creek

Capitalize on the historic Fall Creek corridor to weave together diverse neighborhoods, encourage civic, ecological, and entrepreneurial ethics, and help re-establish the Mid-North area on the regional map as a unique and progressive place to call home.

- + Clean, restore, and celebrate Fall Creek
- + Recreational, entrepreneurial, and educational opportunities
- + New housing and businesses
- + Public art and streetscapes that reflect the neighborhood spirit

Vision of a brighter tomorrow.

our Plan

1. The Mid-North area will have an appearance that reflects the spirit, history, and culture of the community, and will provide access to art, nature, beauty and recreation for everyone, every day.

- Develop a brand identity for the Mid-North area which can be applied in areas of marketing and communications, aesthetics and business development.
- Improve conditions of infrastructure elements of the Mid-North area.
- Increase access to greenspace and recreation, including community gardens, parks and raingardens.
- Improve aesthetics of neighborhood through nature, beauty and art.
- Advocate for improved connections to current and future transit.

2. The Mid-North area's business environment will contribute to an improved economic situation of local residents, local businesses, and growing neighborhood serving commercial centers.

- Focus on incubating entrepreneurship within the Mid-North area.
- Create an environment that supports and grows Mid-North area businesses.
- Identify and grow specific neighborhood-serving commercial centers.

3. The Mid-North area will be a safer community with improved communication and cross-neighborhood coordination.

- Create communication between all Neighborhood Associations, their neighbors, and the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department.
- Strengthen the relationships between the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department and the Mid-North community.
- Educate Mid-North area residents about safety procedures.
- Create a Mid-North area assets directory.

4. Mid-North area residents and educational organizations are partners in educational excellence, family learning, and a resurgence of progressive innovation that improves learning and life outcomes, cultivates productive citizens, and creates world-class educational facilities and resources.

- Create a "Cradle to Career" family learning-initiative.
- Engage residents, educational organizations, and education advocates in a Mid-North area educational round table.
- Educate, empower, and involve parents and guardians in early childhood education as well as educational opportunities and learning activities.
- Encourage excellence and success in early education programs.
- Pursue business as learning.
- Increase resident awareness, access and connectivity to educational facilities.

5. Mid-North area residents will embrace holistic wellness and live healthier lifestyles.

- Improve access to health and wellness education facilities and resources.
- Improve wellness education outreach.

6. The Mid-North area will address substandard housing and housing-related quality of life issues for homeowners and renters in the six Mid-North neighborhoods by using a creative and informed mix of renovation, repurposing, and new development.

- Develop, establish and facilitate a neighbor-powered volunteer group who will advocate for changes in policy and practice that affect the quality of the Mid-North area's housing.
- Create new and innovative uses for vacant and abandoned properties.
- Continue to promote and support homeownership in the Mid-North area. Implement targeted housing revitalization efforts.
- Utilize housing planning and redevelopment as an economic development opportunity.

7. Seniors are empowered to age and engage in the neighborhoods of Mid-North.

- Establish networks and centers of services that help keep seniors engaged with each other and their communities.
- Provide a continuum of housing and housing services that allow seniors to age in place in the neighborhood.
- Create a N-NORC (Neighborhood- Naturally Occurring Retirement Community).
- Arrange networks of services that help ensure seniors' safety at home and in their community.

8. Seniors will enjoy a high quality of life by embracing a holistic approach to wellness that addresses their physical, intellectual, and spiritual needs.

- Promote health by informing seniors about, and coordinating providers of: medical, insurance, prevention measures, health and alternative health options, fitness, and nutrition.
- Promote activities that strengthen the mental, intellectual, and spiritual health of seniors.

9. Youth are aware of and have access to community resources to empower and improve their own quality of life.

- Gather and disseminate information about youth in the neighborhood.
- Develop and leverage more accessibility and engagement to youth programs.
- Improve mobility of neighborhood youth by increasing transportation options.
- Develop youth-led, project-based community learning programs.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Covering three square miles in the heart of Indianapolis, the Mid-North area is home to more than 10,000 residents of all backgrounds living in six distinct neighborhoods: Crown Hill, Highland Vicinity, Historic Meridian Park, Mapleton-Fall Creek, Meridian Highland, and Watson-McCord. An unparalleled array of institutional partners including major destinations like Ivy Tech Community College and The Children's Museum of Indianapolis as well as dozens of places of worship, non-profit organizations, and private enterprises also call the neighborhood home.

Developed in the early part of the 20th century when bridges and streetcars first crossed historic Fall Creek, the neighborhood has a storied history of embracing innovation, integration, and education, the legacy on which this plan is built.

QUALITY OF LIFE PLANNING

Quality of life planning emphasizes the philosophy of asset-based community development that reminds us to: see assets, not liabilities; develop the strengths of our neighborhoods, and not focus on the weaknesses; and, learn from one another, so that we can collectively implement positive change in our neighborhoods.

Our plan was developed by the community stakeholders who will be most impacted by the plan: the residents, institutions, schools, businesses, places of worship, associations, and organizations that call the neighborhood home. Our plan is also comprehensive in nature. Housing, economic development, transportation, safety, education, land use, ecology, culture, and other aspects of neighborhoods are all intimately intertwined and must be incorporated in a comprehensive vision.

STAYING INVOLVED

The hundreds of stakeholders and organizations who developed this plan are invested in seeing it succeed. Not only did we invest thousands of hours in its development, we have committed to carrying out each and every action item. We're not expecting anyone to do this work for us. This is our plan, and we're going to make it happen.

Our plan is just the beginning, and with the continued investment of time and resources by neighborhood stakeholders, and the support of partners, we will build a quality of life and a community that is sustainable in every definition.

Background Information

SIX NEIGHBORHOODS. one VISION.

This quality of life plan was developed by and for the residents and stakeholders of the neighborhoods of Mid-North: Crown Hill, Highland Vicinity, Historic Meridian Park, Mapleton-Fall Creek, Meridian Highland, and Watson-McCord.

HOW TO USE THE PLAN

This quality-of-life plan is the compilation of many great ideas and countless hours of hard work. It is meant to capture the energy that this neighborhood has for making this a better place to live, work and play. In this document we present a vision of all the things our neighborhood seeks to accomplish in the coming years, and we specify who, what, when, and where these accomplishments will take place. The planning process—from community building through visioning and action teams—is also captured in this document so that others may replicate our successes. Most importantly this plan is a living guide for neighborhood progress. It will not sit on a shelf, but instead regularly inform the strategic decisions of neighborhood leaders. Thus, elements of this plan should be incorporated into the strategic plans of neighborhood groups and institutions as appropriate. Similarly, we also expect that this plan will serve as a roadmap to guide investors and other potential partners interested in helping us accomplish our neighborhood goals. This plan will be revisited annually, if not more frequently, so that it consistently reflects the priorities and opportunities in our neighborhood.

ABOUT QUALITY OF LIFE PLANNING

Quality of life planning emphasizes the philosophy of asset-based community development that reminds us to: see assets, not liabilities; develop the strengths of our neighborhoods, and not focus on the weaknesses; and, learn from one another, so that we can collectively implement positive change in our neighborhoods. Quality of life plans are developed by the community stakeholders who will be most impacted by the plan: the residents, institutions, schools, businesses, places of worship, associations, and organizations that call the neighborhood home. Those very same stakeholders are also charged with implementing the plan. Each action item identified in this plan was developed by these neighborhood stakeholders and at least one stakeholder has agreed to carry out every item. Quality of life planning is also comprehensive in nature. Housing, economic development, transportation, safety, education, land use, ecology, culture, and other aspects of neighborhoods are all intimately intertwined and must be incorporated in a comprehensive vision.

PLANNING PROCESS

In the Spring of 2010, residents and other stakeholders from the Mid-North neighborhoods of Crown Hill, Highland Vicinity, Historic Meridian Park, Mapleton-Fall Creek, Meridian Highland and Watson-McCord came together for preliminary meetings of the Mid-North Quality of Life plan. With the Children's Museum of Indianapolis serving as the convener for the effort, the first order of business for participants was to create a collaboration team to guide the creation of the plan. This group of committed Mid-North stakeholders met monthly and laid the ground work for the planning process by...

- Creating a website and social networking site for those on the collaboration team and the Mid-North community; whereby visitors could find more information about the plan
- Setting up an e-blast list to communicate with Mid-North stakeholders. This list eventually grew to over 800 members!
- Creating a timeline for the plan
- Hiring a Community Builder to manage and support the process

The principles of collaboration, engagement and hard work were at the very heart of the Mid-North planning effort. The collaboration team was tasked with not only the creation and implementation of the plan, but with ensuring deep community engagement and weigh in; a tall order. They agreed the first step in getting the pulse of the Mid-North area was to do something simple, though rarely done... have community members sit face to face and talk to each other.

The Interviews

In the fall of 2010, the collaboration team came up with the names of 100+ community and organizational leaders in the Mid-North area. The team targeted the group of leaders for one-on-one interviews, but they knew they needed help to complete the work. The collaboration members put out the call that they were looking for additional neighbors to complete the process. A training session was held in October of 2010, and nearly 30 additional community members learned how to conduct SWOT interviews.

These interviews, which gauge community leaders' perceptions of the Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities and Threats of the neighborhood, were completed in five months. The interviews and the linkages that came out of these interviews created the framework for additional engagement activities which included canvassing by neighborhood youth to more than 1,000 homes to spread the message of the plan, identifying over 200 community assets (such as schools, churches, and businesses) and regular attendance by collaboration team members to neighborhood association meetings, business forums and other community meetings. The engagement by the team served to deepen the relationships among those in the Mid-North Area and culminated with the community convening for a neighborhood event.

The Summit

In April 9, 2011 residents and other stakeholders came together for the Mid-North Community Visioning Summit. Planning for the day included utilizing a community IMAGINE grant to support pre- and post-Summit marketing and engagement strategies. In addition, the collaboration group divided into three teams--logistics, design and outreach--in order to ensure the day went off without a hitch. Shortridge High School was selected as the venue for the event. The school, which boasts many graduates in the Mid-North area, is also registered as a national landmark. On the day of the Summit, more than 300 residents and other stakeholders kicked off activities in the Caleb Mills auditorium at the school. Attendees were entertained by local dancers, given some background on the quality of life plan effort and then moved to the school cafeteria to begin their work. Using the original interviews completed by area stakeholders as the backdrop, participants were able to brainstorm in small groups to come up with several priority areas upon which the community should focus. The morning activities were followed by lunch as members of the collaboration team believed “breaking bread” with neighbors was one of the best ways to bring people to the table. All the food was donated in-kind and contact information was collected to further engage residents in the process. Just like the interviews, the Summit was the kick start to the next leg of the planning process.

The Action Teams

The ideas from the Summit were transformed into Action Teams. These Action Teams, comprised of stakeholders in the community, met over the summer of 2011 to come up with their part of the plan. The Action Teams were formed around six areas: Aesthetics, Business Development, Crime and Safety, Education, Housing, Senior Advocacy, and Youth Engagement. Meetings were held at Fall Creek Academy charter school and upwards to 100 community stakeholders attended each of the nine meetings. Working off of a results based accountability model, participants started with the results and then worked their way backwards to the specific action steps to create the plan. The meetings also included ongoing outreach to organizational partners in the community that would be accountable for taking the lead in making the different action steps happen. In addition to the Action Team meetings, $15,000 was made available from the Local Initiatives Support Corporation to promote “Early Action” community projects that would be completed while the planning process was still underway. The grants had to meet criteria such as:

- Show visible results within three to six months;
- Benefit residents of all six neighborhoods;
- Promote stakeholder engagement;
- Complement the purposes of the Mid-North Quality of Life Plan;

Out of more than 20 grant proposals submitted, projects were ultimately funded that completed a Mid-North Infrastructure Survey, allowed local entrepreneurs to start up businesses, trained area youth in neighborhood canvassing and started an oral history project.

The Next Phase

In September of 2011, members of the Action Teams came together again to tie all the pieces of the plan together. Members also used group exercises to come up with themes that represented their visions. These themes would ultimately be used in the plan document. The later part of 2011 was used to solidify partners and a sustainability group was also created to work on the implementation phase of the plan. The Mid-North residents and other stakeholders completed their plan in December 2011 and celebrated with a Community Unveiling event at the Children’s Museum of Indianapolis in January of 2012.

NEIGHBORHOOD BEGINNINGS

It wasn't too long ago – only a little more than a century and a half – that the area now home to the six neighborhoods of the Mid-North area was completely undeveloped. It was pristine land completely distinct from the town that has since come to be known as Indianapolis. There's even a legend that the hill on Watson Road was once known as the "High Ridge" of a stream running through to Fall Creek from the "Short Ridge" where the high school now stands.

Legends aside, there's documented history indicating that, toward the middle of the 19th Century, much of the area had become farmland with a few small areas beginning to be thought of as stopping places between Indianapolis and somewhere else.

One of these stopping places was at a very small community located near what is now Illinois and 38th Streets. Although it has since become known as part of Crown Hill neighborhood, it was then known as Maple Town or Sugar Grove (for the many sugar maple trees that grew here). Horse-drawn carriages would stop there on their way to vacation in outlying Broad Ripple. Eventually this stopping place became Mapleton, and a post office was established in the 1850s.

During the next decades, a street railway system ran along Illinois Street to Crown Hill Cemetery, and its turnaround was to the west. Once part of the Indianapolis and Westfield Gravel Road, Illinois Street is probably the oldest street in the neighborhood. In 1891, the railway system extended east along Maple Road when the Indiana State Fairgrounds was built.

Meanwhile, more farms and single-family homes were built and small residential areas were developed throughout the area, first west of Meridian Street, then east, some along Maple Road, some closer to what we now know as 30th Street. Fall Creek Parkway was designed by prominent landscape architect George Kessler as a scenic boulevard and part of a city-wide network of parks connected by beautiful parkways. The bridges that still stand today, along with pedestrian promenades along the creek made the area very attractive to visitors.

By the first decade of the 1900s, when the advent of automobiles made the area more accessible, more family vacation homes were built and developers subdivided parcels of land to create small communities here and there. Particularly in the neighborhoods now known as Crown Hill, Highland Vicinity, and Meridian Highland, the homes were laid out according to a gridiron subdivision concept which attracted homeowners who did not have to depend on public transportation. The area became home to many of the city's most prosperous, especially along the Meridian Street corridor between Fall Creek and Maple Road. Charles W. Fairbanks, Vice President of the United States, built his mansion at 30th and Meridian in 1913. Plumbing and sewage lines were extended to the neighborhood in 1914. The next year, the Governor's residence, in the prevalent Tudor Revival style, was built at 101 W. 27th Street.

By the end of the 20s, several large churches including Third Christian Scientist, Tabernacle Presbyterian, Church of the Advent (Episcopal), Our Redeemer Lutheran, and Parish Church of the Advent (later Trinity Episcopal) had been built. Shortridge High School moved into its location at 34th and Meridian Street and School #76 (also known as the Paul C. Stetson School) opened.

During the 30s, all areas of the Mid-North neighborhoods were built up as small clusters of similar housing stock. Schools provided classes in music and art as a matter of normal curricula. Trackless trolleys (electric buses) replaced interurban trains, and the automobile, proliferating by this time, became the vehicle of choice for those who could afford one.

With the advent of World War II, schools and other neighborhood institutions created war-service committees to build "victory gardens", conduct bond and war stamp sales, and engage the community in a variety of war-relief efforts. Beginning in the 1940s, affluent residents began moving out to the townships and suburbs. The Governor's residence moved north out of the neighborhood and the Children's Museum, today the largest in the world, moved into a mansion at 30th and Meridian Streets where its current building stands. Tabernacle Presbyterian Church's recreation program was rated one of the five best of its kind in the United States.

The 50s and 60s were a time of great change. It was the time when the baby-boom children of the post-war years reached school age, and neighborhood schools became overcrowded. Following national trends made possible by interstate highways and federally guaranteed mortgages, many families began migrating out of the neighborhood, and homes that had once held stable single families became rental properties or sites for many new businesses appearing on the scene. During the mid-fifties, Time and Newsweek ranked Shortridge as one of the best schools in America, with its progressive hands-on learning approach, illustrated by the launch during this time of student radio station WIAN (which eventually grew into WFYI public radio today). During this time, several other institutions also got their start in the neighborhood. IUPUI began when Purdue University opened an Extension program office across 38th Street from the State Fairgrounds, a Memorial Clinic (the precursor to the former Winona Memorial Hospital) at 32nd and Meridian Streets opened as the first private, for-profit hospital in the city, and

The Indiana Herald, housed at 2170 N. Illinois Street, established itself in 1958 as "the African-American and multi-ethnic newspaper serving Indiana and nationally." Students and faculty at Shortridge High School, the first integrated school in the State, stood in support of continued integration in the face of attempts to diminish minority representation at the school.

It was during this era that Mapleton-Fall Creek Neighborhood Association was founded, eventually to become one of the most visible neighborhood groups in the city. The Children's Museum held its first Haunted House with more than 26,000 attending. Two clinics – one medical, the other legal – opened at Broadway United Methodist Church to serve area residents. Mt. Zion Baptist Church moved to its current home across Boulevard Place from Crown Hill Cemetery. A plan to bring infrastructure and housing in Mapleton-Fall Creek up to building and health codes, the first of its kind in the city, was implemented in 1967 and a city-based neighborhood three-year pilot improvement plan was begun in 1969.

Through the 1970s the neighborhoods continued to evolve. The Mid-North Church Council, a coalition of churches in and around Mapleton-Fall Creek, formed to strengthen the outreach of its member churches by staying in the community. The Mid-North Food Pantry began as a combined ministry of the Council. Near North Development Corporation was formed in 1977 as a partnership among businesses, neighborhoods, and institutions. Job-training programs began and many other initiatives focused on renewing the vitality of the area got underway during this time.

The place where the original Maple Town/Mapleton once served as way station for travelers from the city to the suburbs underwent a significant change in the 80s. A McDonald's restaurant at the corner of 38th and Illinois brought the trend toward replacing small, locally-owned shops with national franchises into the neighborhoods in a way that had not been seen before.

Martin Luther King Multi-Service Center, formerly Butler-Tarkington Community Center, relocated to 38th and Meridian Streets and expanded its service area to include all six of the Mid-North neighborhoods and some farther north. School bussing began, bringing about the end of neighborhood schools. Ivy Tech, then Indiana Vocational and Technical School, moved to what had been the old American United Life building at the corner of Fall Creek Parkway and Meridian Street. The first annual North Meridian Street Fair was held. Community stakeholder groups, in collaboration with faith and neighborhood groups such as the neighborhood associations and development corporations, initiated various housing, health and recreational programs.

Mapleton-Fall Creek Development Corporation grew out of collaboration between Mid-North Church Council and the Mapleton-Fall Creek Neighborhood Association, inaugurating its first five year plan in 1986. Marion County Health Department opened a clinic on west 38th Street for adolescents. Meridian Park Historic District (now Historic Meridian Park Neighborhood) was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1990.

The 80s saw much creativity and improvement. Affordable housing and rehabilitation projects, infrastructure improvements, home repair/maintenance/weatherization programs, job training, adopt-a-block programs, and many creative social service initiatives to improve the quality of life were in full swing and continue to this day. With all this positive, proactive activity on the part of institutions large and small in the neighborhoods, residents and stakeholders began to take a much more active role in their neighborhood associations.

Meanwhile, Allison Christian Community Center opened, Phillips Temple CME moved into the former site of Third Christian Scientist Church, Indiana Black Expo moved its headquarters to the 3100 block of Meridian Street, a Walgreens drugstore opened at 38th and College, Reclamation I project of Mapleton-Fall Creek Development Corporation began helping renters become neighborhood homeowners. IUPUI moved its last program from the 38th Street campus and Shortridge became a middle school. A legal aid and medical clinic was established at the Allison Center. Mapleton-Fall Creek Neighborhood Association, then encompassing Historic Meridian Park and Watson-McCord neighborhoods, held weekly marches on suspected crack houses and established a "Good Neighbor Fair" on summer Saturdays on an empty lot at 30th and Central.

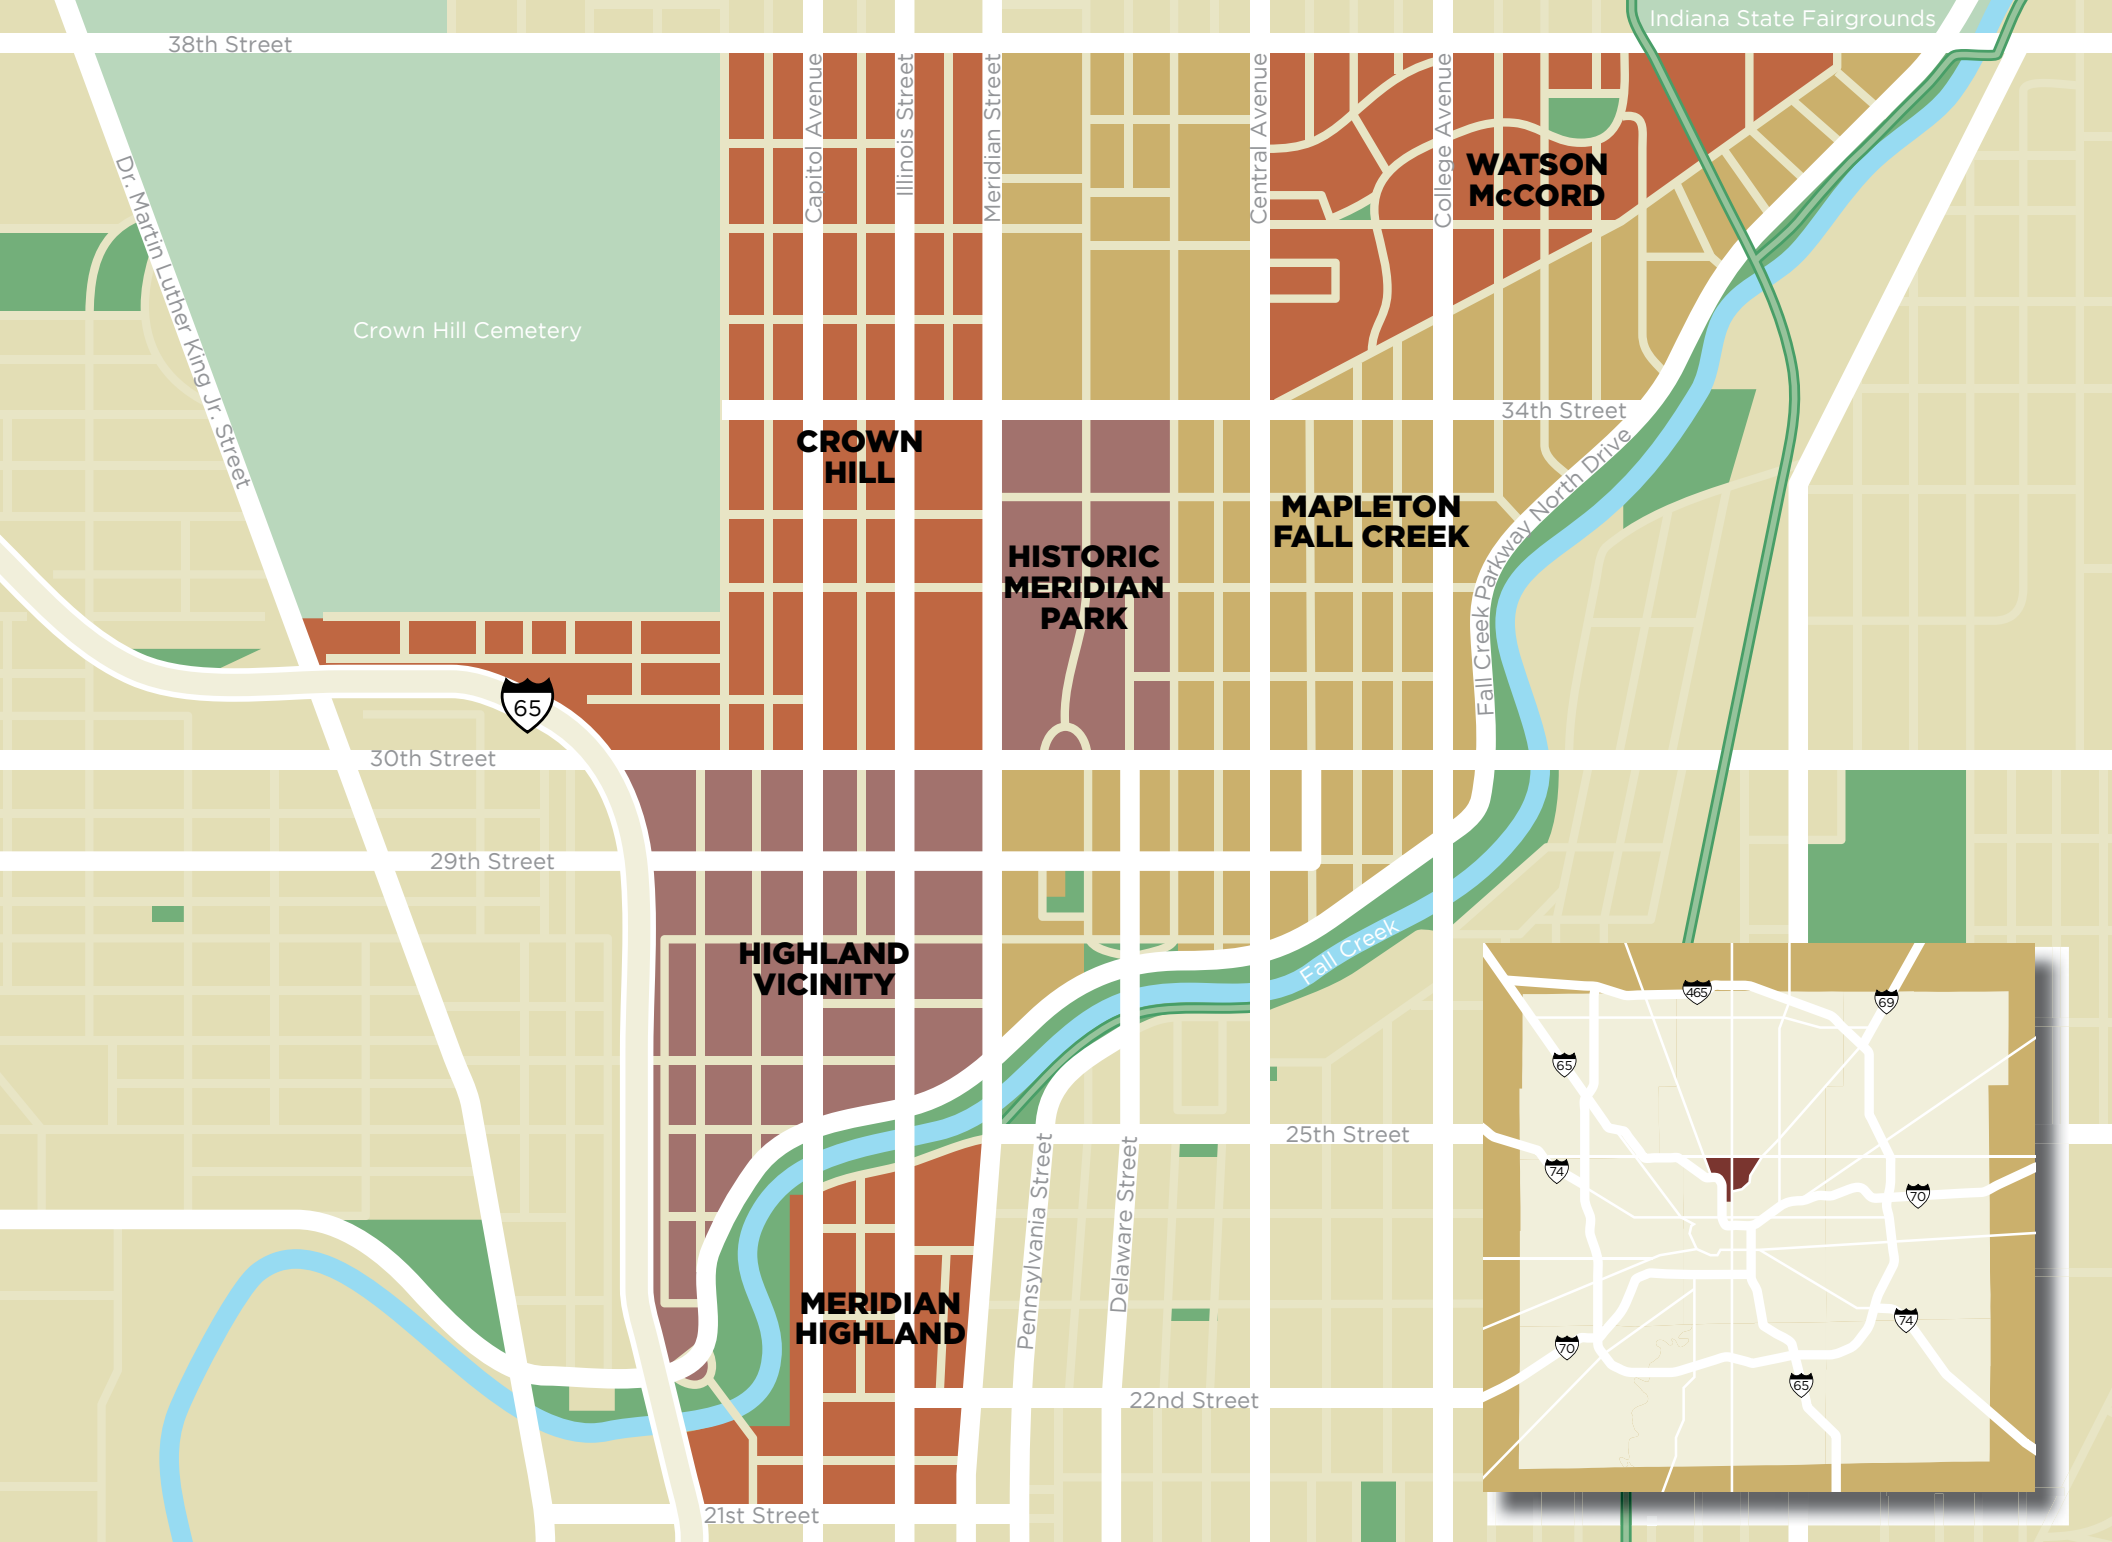

Just the same, serious crime rose sharply during this period throughout the entire city as well as the rest of the nation. The Mid-North neighborhoods were not spared, and the number of homicides, emerging gang problems, escalating gun use and other violent crimes spiked.

In response a multi-agency crime control/prevention program called Weed and Seed was brought in and several sites were chosen to be the first to participate. It *Two players from the Shortridge High School basketball team receive the second place trophy after falling to Gary Roosevelt High School in the 1968 Indiana High School Championship. was under this Weed and Seed initiative in the late 90s that the six Mid-North Neighborhoods first began to work together, and the first time the "mid-north" term was applied to this community configuration.

During the decade following the turn of the century the Historic Meridian Park and Watson-McCord neighborhood associations were born, and all six neighborhood associations were fully functioning. Mapleton-Fall Creek Development Corporation shaped a targeted comprehensive community development strategy to combat housing deterioration and reduce criminal activity by building community, increasing homeownership, and improving neighborhood appearance. The InfoZone, a branch of the Indianapolis Marion County Public Library, opened inside the Children's Museum. Near North Development Corporation worked to entice new retail ventures to the area as part of a program. Fire Station 14 at Kenwood and 30th Streets was rebuilt, stimulating considerable interest in redeveloping a 29th/30th Street Corridor Improvement Plan and the Children's Museum District Plan, which combined housing, environmental remediation, beautification, public safety, and business expansion and retention. Three abandoned gas stations at the 29th and Capitol intersection were cleared as a result, and a Neighborhood Development Working Group, an early pre-cursor to the Mid-North Quality of Life planning process, was formed to help guide increasing neighborhood revitalization investments by the Children's Museum. Fall Creek Academy, a charter school with a rigorous academic program, opened at the intersection of 25th and Capital Streets. Shortridge re-opened as a college preparatory Magnet High School for Law and Public Policy. Ivy Tech Community College continues to expand through renovations to its existing site and the old St. Vincent's Hospital building, renamed the Illinois Fall Creek Center. And the Children's Museum is working in consultation with neighborhood stakeholders to redevelop the former Winona Memorial Hospital into a mix of community-serving uses in the heart of the neighborhood.

But that's just the beginning!

BUILDING ON momentum

Our plan builds on the momentum of many larger physical projects already under development or planned initiatives in the pipeline, a sampling of which are included here.

Mapleton-Fall Creek 20/21 Vision Plan

Mapleton-Fall Creek Development Corporation is implementing a comprehensive neighborhood revitalization strategy that will rehab 21 single-family homes and 54 rental units, develop three neighborhood parks, boost economic growth through mixed use development and create transportation enhancements, including the reversion of Central Avenue back to a neighborhood-friendly 2-way street.

Mapleton-Fall Creek LEED-ND

Mapleton-Fall Creek Development Corporation has registered a 27-acre portion of their 20/21 Target Area for the LEED-ND® (Leadership in Environmental Design in Neighborhood Development) program and continues to work closely with a project team to help devise a plan to achieve certification, with the intention of preserving the neighborhood fabric while making targeted improvements to walkability, equity, green infrastructure, and neighborhood amenities.

Near North 30/33

Near North Development Corporation is implementing a Neighborhood Stabilization Program project focused on housing revitalization through new infill construction, rehabilitation of abandoned or foreclosed homes, and supporting existing homeowners with repair assistance.

Illinois Fall Creek Center at Ivy Tech

Ivy Tech is rehabilitating the historic St. Vincent Hospital, constructed in 1909 along Fall Creek Parkway, to provide 200,000 square feet of additional instructional, community, and meeting space, including a new café. A newly-built addition to the building, as well as a skywalk across Illinois Street, will also be added.

RebuildIndy Infrastructure

Several streets will see resurfacing and/or curb and sidewalk reconstruction.

Bike Lanes

Bicycle Lanes have been added to Capitol Avenue and Illinois Street through the neighborhood with plans to add them to Washington Boulevard/Delaware Street and Central Avenue as well.

Fall Creek Trail

IndyParks continues to work on plans to extend the Fall Creek Trail from its current terminus at the Monon Trail south through the neighborhood, providing additional recreation and transportation options while tying the neighborhood into the region.

Meridian Street Bridge Rehabilitation

The historic Meridian Street bridge over Fall Creek will be rehabilitated and restored through the City of Indianapolis' RebuildIndy program. The iconic arch bridge was built in 1917 and was the last of the five Kessler bridges across Fall Creek.

Winona Hospital Redevelopment

The former Winona Memorial Hospital has been razed and environmental contamination remediated, opening a significant redevelopment opportunity in the heart of the neighborhood. The Children's Museum is working with the City of Indianapolis on redevelopment plans that will include some affordable housing and neighborhood greenspace.

Trinity Church-St. Richard's School Campus

The Trinity Church-St. Richard's School proposed campus master plan includes expansion to the north for Trinity education, fellowship, and office spaces, an expansion to the south for St. Richard's with more classrooms, a cafeteria, and a performing arts center, and a conversion of 33rd Street to a pedestrian area.

Fall Creek Gardens

This developing urban farm teaches organic and sustainable methods of growing food, encourages community garden space, and provides access to tools, supplies and information. A rain water harvesting system will soon collect stormwater from the roof of the adjacent Unleavened Bread Cafe.

Double 8 Foods Rain Garden

The proposed rain garden at the Double 8 grocery store calls for the design and installation of a comprehensive on-site stormwater management system. The garden seeks to address a community need for more greenspace while also having a direct and beneficial environmental impact on the area. The rain garden will be an opportunity to provide educational resources to students and local residents, and have a direct and indirect aesthetic benefit for the surrounding neighborhood.

Coppin Chapel Pocket Park

Coppin Chapel AME Church and Near North Development Corporation are proposing the building of a pocket park next to the church at 3201 North Capitol. The initial plan would see the park built over two or three church owned lots, and would be designed with an eye towards community accessibility and gathering space, kid-friendly elements, and environmental impact.

Fall Creek Storage Tunnel

As part of the federally-mandated plan to reduce raw sewage overflows into Indianapolis waterways, including Fall Creek, a 7 to 10 mile tunnel system will be built to store sewage during rainfalls so that it can later be treated, rather than overflowing into waterways as it does today. A tunnel 200 feet below Fall Creek will begin near the State Fairgrounds and connect to other tunnels at White River.

IndyConnect

The IndyConnect Initiative seeks to dramatically improve the mobility of residents in Central Indiana and position the region competitively through significant investments in roads, public transit, and bike and pedestrian connections. If approved, bus rapid transit lines would run on Meridian and 38th Streets, and the first leg of a regional rail system connecting the northeastern suburbs with downtown would run near the neighborhood. It is vital the neighborhood connect to this regional vision so it is a place transit connects, not simply passes through.

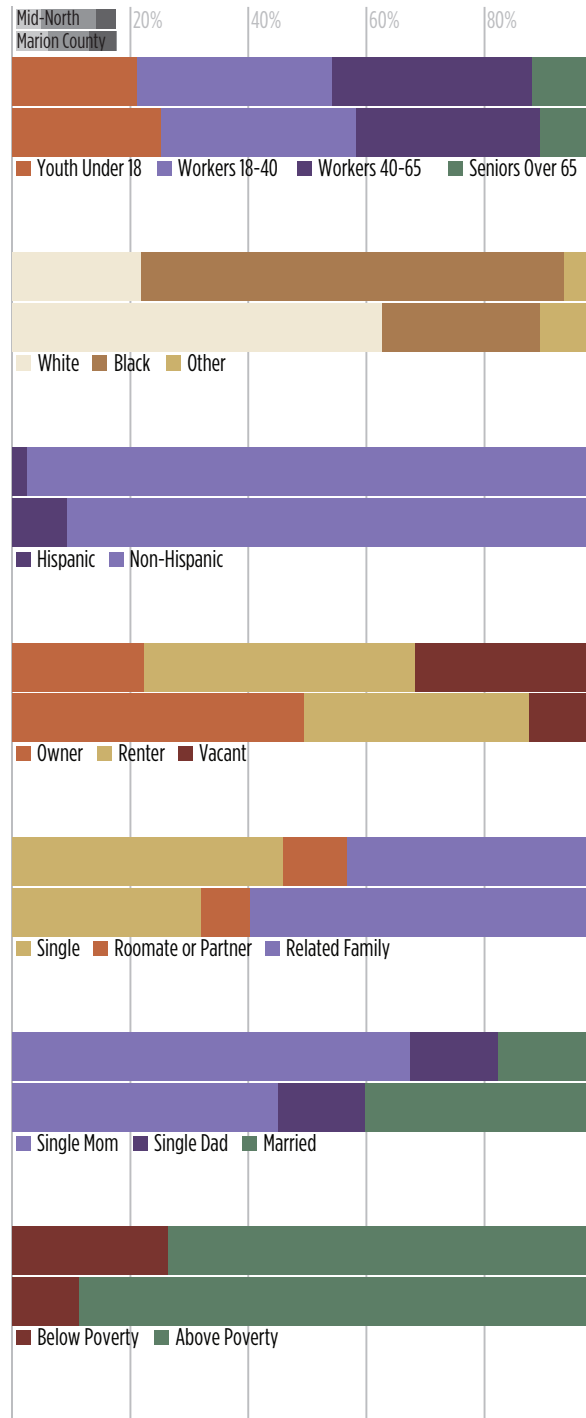

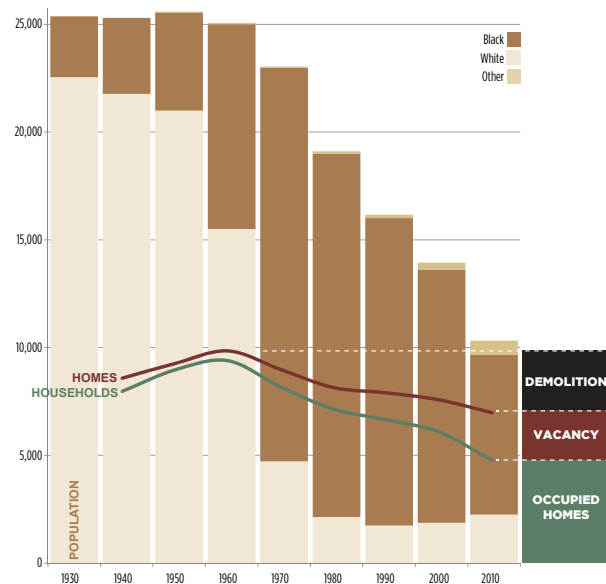

NEIGHBORHOOD Demographics

The history of the neighborhood can be summed up by looking at the historical data offered by the U.S. Census. Today the neighborhood is home to just over 10,000 people, just 40% of its peak population in 1950. As the population declined, so did the housing stock. Today there are just under 7,000 housing units in the neighborhood, but of that nearly a third sit vacant. With a declining population comes less demand for homes, resulting in falling property values as well as vacant homes potentially leading to abandonment and demolition. Businesses, faced with a declining customer base, have also been forced to leave the neighborhood.

Note: Data from the U.S. Census for the Mid-North area is for Census Tracts 3503, 3504, 3509, 3510, and 3515. The geography of these tracts does not exactly line up with the Mid-North area boundaries, but only tract-level data for the 2010 Census was available at time of production.

NEIGHBORHOOD CHANGES, 1930-2010

STATISTICAL ALMANAC

Age

There are fewer youths by percentage and more working-age residents in the neighborhood, both a factor of the larger number of single-person households. 2010 Census.

Race

The neighborhood has a far greater minority population than the county. 2010 Census.

Ethnicity

The neighborhood has fewer residents of hispanic origin. 2010 Census.

Housing Occupancy

The neighborhood has far fewer homeowners and far more vacant homes, suggesting an opportunity for investment in housing rehabilitation and homeownership programs. 2010 Census.

Household Type

The neighborhood has more single households and fewer families, possibly a factor of the large number of apartments in the neighborhood. 2010 Census.

Families with Children

Nearly two-thirds of neighborhood kids live with a single mother, highlighting a potential opportunity for parenting, youth, and family development programs. 2010 Census.

Poverty

Residents living in poverty was more than double the county rate in 2000, highlighting an opportunity for workforce, entrepreneurship, and economic development as well as the need for a continuum of social services. 2000 Census.

TRACKING IMPACT

Statistical data is by no means the only way to evaluate the health of a neighborhood. But like a blood test at the doctor's office, it does provide an overall assessment of indicators of neighborhood health. While each action step identified in the workplan has detailed performance measures by which they can individually be measured, these overall baseline indicators can be tracked to gauge the overall impact of the plan.

Educational Attainment

While the share of residents with a high school diploma is about the same, the neighborhood has more drop-outs and fewer college graduates, presenting a tremendous opportunity for educational programs serving residents. 2000 Census.

Crime

Violent crime, especially robbery and aggravated assault, is more prevalent in the neighborhood, but property crime is lower. 2008, IMPD.

Business Growth

Reference USA lists 196 businesses located in the Mid-North area, excluding medical offices, schools, and daycare facilities.

Vacant and Abandoned Housing

Properties that, according to the United States Postal Service, were vacant homes or buildings in December 2011.

Access to Green Space

Areas of the neighborhood within a five-minute walk (a quarter-mile) of a municipal park (dark green) or other greenspace.

ASSETS & Opportunities

The assets of the neighborhoods of Mid-North are the foundation on which this quality of life plan builds and are the keys to opening up the opportunities the community has identified in this plan.

RESIDENTS AND ASSOCIATIONS

The six neighborhoods that make up the Mid-North area are home to active and committed residents of all backgrounds. Residents have a proven record of coming together to address common concerns and promote quality of life for everyone.

INSTITUTIONS

From engaged places of worship that provide community programs, childcare, financial services, recreation programs, and emergency help to world-class facilities like Ivy Tech, The Children's Museum of Indianapolis, and the Indiana State Fair that are regional destinations for health, education, and entertainment, the collection of diverse institutions in the neighborhood is unparalleled.

HISTORY

The Mid-North area has a rich history. The homes range from craftsman bungalows to elegant mansions to beautiful apartment buildings. Fall Creek, and the historic bridges that cross it, is part of the historic Kessler Parks and Boulevards System. Shortridge High School and the progressive education values it adopted, and the civil rights issues it attracted, reflect the social values that have evolved over time. And Crown Hill Cemetery serves as the final resting place of who's who of the community.

LOCATION

The Mid-North area is close to a vibrant downtown, world-class hospitals, the Indiana State Fairgrounds, and countless other major destinations. It also has great access with Interstate 65, major streets, an emerging bicycle route network, and a solid network of bus service.

OPPORTUNITIES

INFRASTRUCTURE

Crumbling sidewalks, neighborhood streets turned into highways for commuters, and a beautiful creek too contaminated to touch have left the neighborhood a very poor infrastructure framework on which to grow. Addressing these and similar public realm issues in a manner that reflects the spirit of the neighborhood, promotes community building, and inspires residents and visitors with beauty and creativity is essential to the rebirth of the Mid-North area.

BUSINESS

As the population has declined, so have the customers needed to support neighborhood businesses. By encouraging businesses to work together and supporting the entrepreneurial spirit of residents, the Mid-North area can once again be home to a growing and engaged

CRIME

Crime and safety concerns permeate many discussions in the neighborhood. Located in the heart of American's 13th largest city, the presence of crime is inevitable. Combined with vacant buildings, poverty, and an unacceptably high drop-out rate, crime is a very real symptom of the decay that has threatened the neighborhood. Neighbors can continue working together through block clubs and associations, in partnership with the churches and organizations working to strengthen individuals and families and with the police and criminal justice system working to combat crime.

HOUSING

Since the peak population in the 1950s, the neighborhood has lost nearly 3,000 homes, and countless more sit vacant or abandoned. While these vacant homes and lots breed crime, disinvestment, and demoralize neighborhoods, they present an opportunity for renewal and reinvestment. Merging historic preservation with innovative, green practices, the neighborhood can once again be a vibrant and growing place to call home.

YOUTH AND SENIORS

With all of the existing assets and resources in the area, it is not surprising that many families call the neighborhoods of Mid-North home. Working to provide support for the most vulnerable—the youth and senior citizens of the neighborhoods—is important in maintaining the quality of life for all. Enriching the lives of young people and helping them become engaged citizens while creating a neighborhood where seniors are able to age in place and continue being engaged role models can build on the strength of committed and engaged residents working for change.

EDUCATION

The presence of world-class educational institutions in neighborhoods where nearly a third of all adults do not even have a high school diploma is perhaps the greatest paradox in the Mid-North area. From the mix of public, private, and charter schools to The Children's Museum of Indianapolis and Ivy Tech, these resources present a tremendous opportunity to develop the neighborhood as an educational corridor that dramatically improves the life outcomes of all residents.

Our Vision

IN OUR OWN WORDS | My neighborhood is family friendly with housing for all ages. Singles, families with children, and seniors interacting in an attractive, friendly, viable place to live, work, volunteer, and play sports, with places to go for good food and entertainment, and with programs bridging seniors and youth to grow healthy gardens, local business, and share life stories. ☞ A day in our future will be clean with vibrant neighborhoods, homes, and businesses renovated with new sidewalks and greenery. Businesses reinvest in the community and partner with others to help provide fresh and healthy food in our neighborhoods. We feel safe with more police visible in our community. What happened to the days when we knew our officers by name? ☞ All people feel connected to, and are supported by, all others in the community. There is a mutual, shared respect. ☞ Residents wake up to a green and clean environment. Families are able to live, work, learn, and play in this neighborhood safely. Our connective, culturally diverse community attracts new businesses and happy, healthy families. ☞ Living in a safe and affordable, family friendly community where there is the option to live, work, and/or play. Where there is an infrastructure that includes local businesses such as dry cleaners, pharmacies, grocery stores, restaurants, and parks within a reasonable distance. ☞ A thriving neighborhood with exceptional social and family friendly coffeeshops and meeting places, mixed-use neighborhoods with good schools, recreational facilities and well-equipped health clubs. ☞ Our neighborhood is an inviting and safe place where people can ride their bikes, walk, and children are playing in the parks. Neighbors of all ages are out and about and know one another by name. The streets and sidewalks are clean and well-lit, almost like 24/7 daylight! Public transport is abundant and easily accessible. Public art and streetscapes reflect creativity and the cultural diversity of the Mid-North communities. Lifelong learning is a priority, small to medium-sized businesses thrive, our health and well-being is nurtured, and resources are accessible to all. P.S. No Drugs! ☞ I look out of my window at the pocket park seeing neighbors enjoying themselves. Right next door is the nationally acclaimed, award-winning school. Living for the weekend there is so much to do. I love to go shopping...gotta get to the meat market—oh, oh—there's a lecture at Ivy Tech I don't want to miss! Can't miss Monday's Mid-North Council meeting for the sit-on-the-porch beauty initiative as well as planning for our annual celebration event. I can walk my dog at night with no fear. How beautiful it is here! It's Sunday—wow we are on the national news! Mid-North community of Indianapolis, a place to visit, a place to live. I think of how lucky I am to live in the mid-north community. ☞ Safe neighborhoods with thriving businesses, walkable sidewalks and bikeable pathways, beautifully-maintained yards, respectfully rehabbed homes, where youth and seniors can co-exist and the community is actively engaged in crime prevention programs. ☞ Welcome to the cultural, family-friendly, community-focused, intergenerational, business and development driven neighborhood with bikeable, walkable pathways; safe meeting places; lively activities; and youth and adult educational achievement so you can live to the fullest. ☞ All neighbors, seniors and youth included, will stroll along well cared for streets lined with occupied houses, play in neighborhood parks, and advocate for sustainable communities with the ability to influence policy, attract public and private investment, and enjoy the company of others.

OVERALL STORIES

The seven action teams developed a workplan organized around nine result statements, 35 strategies, and 118 action steps.

Neighborhood + Opportunity

Dreams will power the growth and rebirth of the neighborhoods, and the community will provide the comprehensive resources necessary to be a neighborhood of opportunity for all.

- New housing options for all ages and backgrounds
- Improved transportation connectivity
- Trails, art, parks, gardens, and wellness options
- Commitment to youth, education, and family learning
- Promoting business and entrepreneurship

The essence of this cumulative work can be summed up in three overarching stories:

Communicate + Connect

Through the synergies of sharing information, celebrating assets, and building a shared identity based on neighborhood values, the neighborhoods of Mid-North will continue to achieve success and be recognized as a special place to live, work, learn, and visit.

- Inventory, promote, and celebrate assets
- Continue momentum with cross-neighborhood collaboration and initiatives
- Building a shared identity based on neighborhood values

Destination + Fall Creek

Capitalize on the historic Fall Creek corridor to weave together diverse neighborhoods, encourage civic, ecological, and entrepreneurial ethics, and help re-establish the Mid-North area on the regional map as a unique and progressive place to call home.

- Clean, restore, and celebrate Fall Creek
- Recreational, entrepreneurial, and educational opportunities
- New housing and businesses
- Public art and streetscapes that reflect the neighborhood spirit

NEIGHBORHOOD + Opportunity

From its humble beginnings, the neighborhoods of Mid-North have always been neighborhoods of opportunity. In the early days, new bridges crossing Fall Creek presented new opportunities for citizens of a growing city to build homes, farms, families, and businesses in the area. Streetcar lines--along Illinois Street to the Crown Hill neighborhood and along College Avenue--further expanded opportunities for residents to get to and from the area and solidified the community as a prominent piece of the Indianapolis landscape. As the neighborhoods grew, a variety of housing, from large mansions to working class duplexes and grand apartments were built, providing opportunities to live in the area for a wide array of people. Shortridge High School, founded downtown as the first free public high school in the state before moving to the neighborhood, has always been an integrated school, providing opportunity for neighborhood residents of all backgrounds for more than eighty years. The school has a history of progressive education inspired by John Dewey, transforming education from simple mastery of knowledge through books to "learning by doing." The first student newspaper in the nation and a student radio station that evolved into today's WFYI exemplify these progressive education principles. Ivy Tech planted roots in the heart of the neighborhood in the early 1980s, and the campus today is the second largest community college in the entire nation, providing higher education opportunities for thousands.

As the Mid-North area has grown, so too have the institutions that support and enrich the lives of its residents. A host of places of worship and social service organizations provide critical holistic support to children, families, and seniors working to live productive and engaged lives. An emphasis on education continues with a full range of public, private, and charter schools that continue the evolution of progressive education techniques and position the neighborhood as a unique educational corridor. Community development corporations work to provide a range of housing services for residents, including making the dream of homeownership possible for many.

The neighborhoods of Mid-North will continue to be a place of opportunity for residents of all backgrounds. New housing options will be added to the area, transforming vacant lots and properties into homeownership and rental opportunities for new and existing residents. Transportation options will promote neighborhood connectivity and enhanced connections to the region, providing greater mobility for residents of all ages. New trails, parks, gardens, and wellness opportunities will inspire residents to live healthy, engaged, and social lives. A continued focus on youth, education, and family learning will truly embody the notion of an educational corridor, as residents engage in a range of cradle to career education programming, leveraging the community's assets of early childhood development, project based, informal and family learning, and workforce development. These resources enable the neighborhood to step beyond the traditional notion of "school" to focus on a broader definition of education, with world-class educational facilities, strong families, neighborhood organizations, and community programming working hand in hand to cultivate enriched, productive citizens and youth that are leaders, not followers. The area will be a place of opportunity for entrepreneurs, with programs, networks, and facilities that help turn great ideas into realized dreams. From cradle to career, the Mid-North area will empower all residents to achieve their dreams. And the small businesses that are the backbone of our economy will thrive, supported by a strong business association, a growing residential, student, and visitor population, and through connections into the larger community.

Dreams will power the growth and rebirth of the neighborhoods, and the community will provide the comprehensive resources necessary to be a neighborhood of opportunity for all.

The Mid-North area is home to a diverse array of key players: six neighborhood associations; two community development corporations; a host of places of worship, social service organizations, non-profit organizations; a range of businesses from entrepreneurial enterprises to major corporations; public, private, and charter schools; and large institutions like Ivy Tech and The Children's Museum to name a few. With so many players working so closely together, it's not surprising that a lot of things are happening! It's also not surprising that it becomes very hard for these players and the residents of the neighborhoods to be aware of everything that is going on. We all shake our heads when a newly repaved street is torn up by a utility company or when we are forced to make a choice between two big neighborhood events that fall on the same evening. It can even be difficult to share and coordinate our daily lives with our own family members, and communication, and the resulting coordination it achieves, is a challenge facing every neighborhood, community, organization, government, and corporation.

While challenging, communication and coordination maximize the impact of the time, money, and mission of each and every stakeholder brings to the table. The good news is the neighborhoods have a track record in reaching across traditional boundaries. The Mid-North Weed and Seed Initiative, for example, has brought together neighborhoods to combat crime and blight. The development of this quality of life plan is a significant

Education Roundtable will bring education stakeholders together to continue the tradition of educational innovation and opportunity for all residents. A housing collective will forge partnerships to address vacant and abandoned properties, housing affordability, and other critical housing issues. A neighborhood task force will promote improved public safety for all residents by sharing information and coordinating activities across neighborhood boundaries. The youth of the area will be empowered through a Youth Council, while seniors will implement a Neighborhood Naturally Occurring Retirement Community program.

Another significant first step is to identify and bring attention to the assets, resources, skills, and networks that already exist in the neighborhood. Whether individual resident talent and experience, organizational programs and offerings, or products and services from neighborhood businesses, identifying what the Mid-North area has is a necessary prerequisite to sharing and coordinating activities.

The quality of life planning process has encouraged the neighborhoods to see the assets, challenges, and opportunities that they have in common while also highlighting those things that make them unique. This healthy tension between shared values and unique qualities is the basis for a desire to undertake a branding process and continue asking and answering the question

"who are we?" Branding may manifest itself in traditional marketing ways, such as a logo and message or tagline. At its core, branding is about communicating who and what we are and what is important to us--our values. Values provide a core understanding that ties groups--whether they be a few friends, a neighborhood, an interest group, a nation, or a society--together. They permeate all aspects of this plan and will guide its implementation. Whether we value tradition or innovation (or both), for example, could translate into how the neighborhoods look and feel, the types of people and businesses that move in or out, and the types of programs and networks that evolve. In short, branding is a key component of communication. It not only positions the area in the eyes of outsiders, it helps us to understand what is important to the "insiders."

Through the synergies of sharing information, celebrating assets, and building a shared identity based on neighborhood values, the neighborhoods of Mid-North will continue to achieve success and be recognized as a special place to live, work, learn, and visit.

Destination + Fall Creek

Fall Creek has been a defining landmark for the neighborhood ever since the first bridges connected the growing city north to what was then pristine farmland dotted with small settlements. Today that farmland has long been plowed under; those settlements are remembered only as namesakes for neighborhoods. But Fall Creek remains as a weaving thread of natural beauty thanks to the foresight of prominent American landscape architect George Kessler, who in 1909 laid out a system of parks and boulevards along six waterways throughout the city. Characterized by landmark, beautifully-ornamented bridges, pedestrian promenades, and extensive native landscaping, the Kessler System today is one of the largest listings on the National Register of Historic Places, at over 3,400 acres.

While beautiful, Fall Creek faces many challenges today. Fall Creek Parkway, once a quaint, scenic drive, has grown into a five-lane commuter corridor that cuts off the Creek from the neighborhood. The last remnants of parkway design can be found in the large homes with magnificent street trees planted in wide tree lawns. However, wide pavement, a reversible traffic lane, highway signage, steel guardrails, and auto-oriented lighting now dominate the character of the street. The creek itself is contaminated with combined sewer overflows that pollute the water with raw sewage during many rainfalls. The native landscaping that was once carefully designed has been displaced by invasive honeysuckle that now chokes off most views of the creek. And many of the landmark bridges are crumbling.

But there is hope. Work to address the combined sewer overflow problem is underway and by 2025 the problem will be nearly eliminated. The historic Central Avenue bridge has been restored, and the Meridian Street bridge is scheduled for restoration in 2012. IndyParks continues to pursue extension of the Fall Creek Trail through the neighborhood. And the signature historic St. Vincent's Hospital building along Fall Creek Parkway has been renovated by Ivy Tech.

It is this momentum that the neighborhoods will push forward in order to re-establish Fall Creek as a destination, not simply the sidebar to a commute. With water that is once again safe to touch, kayaking and canoeing can be encouraged with a public boat launch. Streambanks can be restored through neighborhood cleanups, invasive honeysuckle removal, and the re-introduction of native landscaping that restores beautiful vistas of the creek from adjacent streets, homes, and parks. The Fall Creek Trail can be completed from its current termination at the Monon Trail south through the neighborhood, including more than a mile without a street crossing, and helping connect neighborhood residents and institutions like Ivy Tech and The Children's Museum into the regional network. Improved pedestrian connections to and across the creek help weave the corridor into adjacent neighborhoods. Fall Creek Parkway can be restored to a parkway condition with a streetscape befitting a parkway that reflects the spirit and character of the neighborhood, and a design policy that promotes neighborhood businesses and safer pedestrian crossings. Historic bridges can be restored to once again serve as landmark gateways that, together with new gateway enhancements and public art, help reflect the history and civic pride of residents. Parks see new investment in a variety of equipment and amenities to provide for a range of passive and active recreation, from places that offer a relaxing respite from city life to bustling playfields that support active lifestyles. Educational opportunities abound with venues, kiosks, and signage that communicate the history and ecology of the area. New infill apartments and condominiums take advantage of this destination, providing for a wide range of housing types and markets while adding tax base, buying power, and eyes on the street. And new space that promotes the entrepreneurial spirit of the neighborhood is created that provides both temporary homes for lemonade stands and neighborhood-grown produce as well as buildings for new restaurants and retail shops that serve both neighborhood residents and visitors to the creek.

Together these actions weave together diverse neighborhoods, encourage civic, ecological, and entrepreneurial ethics, and help re-establish the Mid-North area on the regional map as a unique and progressive place to call home.

WORK Plan

Our vision will be realized when nine results are achieved, and the strategies and action steps outlined in our workplan detail how we will accomplish those results.

1. The Mid-North area will have an appearance that reflects the spirit, history, and culture of the community, and will provide access to art, nature, beauty and recreation for everyone, every day.
2. The Mid-North area's business environment will contribute to an improved economic situation of local residents, local businesses, and growing neighborhood serving commercial centers.
3. The Mid-North area will be a safer community with improved communication and cross-neighborhood coordination.
4. Mid-North area residents and educational organizations are partners in educational excellence, family learning, and a resurgence of progressive innovation that improves learning and life outcomes, cultivates productive citizens, and creates world-class educational facilities and resources.
5. Mid-North area residents will embrace holistic wellness and live healthier lifestyles.
6. The Mid-North area will address substandard housing and housing-related quality of life issues for homeowners and renters in the six Mid-North neighborhoods by using a creative and informed mix of renovation, remodeling, repurposing, and new development.
7. Seniors are empowered to age and engage in the neighborhoods of Mid-North.
8. Seniors will enjoy a high quality of life by embracing a holistic approach to wellness that addresses their physical, intellectual, and spiritual needs.
9. Youth are aware of and have access to community resources to empower and improve their own quality of life.
