

District 5 Newly Elected Councilwoman Betty Guardado

Betty Guardado served as the director of organizing and vice president of Unite Here Local 11 Union. Unite Here International is a labor union representing hospitality workers. Guardado is also a board member of Central Arizonans for a Sustainable Economy and Arizona AFL-CIO. Mayor Gallego credited Guardado for her long commitment to organizing and advocating for better working conditions. She called Garcia one of Phoenix's best known civil rights leaders.

Guardado started her career as a housekeeper at a Phoenix hotel and worked her way up in the hotel workers' union, most recently serving as the director of organizing and vice president. Her leadership style was quite obviously developed through her decades of work with labor organizing.

Guardado has stated her union roots will help her mobilize her constituents. The Phoenix City Council has not always been supportive of union causes, including those brought by Unite Here. However, Guardado told The Arizona Republic in an interview that she believes she'll be able to work with each member of the council to build coalitions.

Phoenix Pool Season is HERE!

Fast Facts on Yard Sales

City of Phoenix Neighborhood Services

How many yard/garage sales can I have per year?

The Zoning Ordinance limits the number of yard/garage sales at all residential property to two sales within a 12-month period. Each sale may not exceed three days in a row.

Can I have a yard sale on the sidewalk or in the street?

No, yard sales should only be conducted on residentially zoned properties. What items can I sell? The purpose of a yard sale is to allow residents to dispose of household items, clothing, furniture, etc. Residents may not use yard sales to sell vehicles, or new or commercial items not intended for household use.

Can I have a yard sale on a vacant lot?

No, this is not permitted.

Who can I call if my neighbors are having frequent yard/garage sales?

North Glen Kitchen A Chef's 7 Laws of Grilling

There's nothing better than standing in front of a hot, smoky, crackling, meat-filled grill. Armed with just a cold beer in one hand and grill tongs in the other, I summon the ancient cooking meat-over-fire knowledge we're all born with. Or cooking vegetables. I don't judge. Anyway, they say the moment we started cooking with fire was when we truly became civilized -- which is why I believe that anytime we're grilling, we still feel that magic deep down inside. And you can keep the magic alive with these fresh, new approaches to your grill.

- 1. Use a probe thermometer. Don't be a hero. As we say in the business, "There's no money in guessing." Cook Grilled Greek Chicken to an internal temperature of 165 degrees F (75 degrees C).
- 2. Grill your bread. After your meat is cooked and resting, use the still-hot coals (or grate) to quickly grill your bread. Everybody knows grilled bread is the best bread. But if you're going to burn the bread, skip this step. Everybody knows burnt bread is the worst bread. Grill the bread or buns when you make amazing Lamb Merguez Sausage Patties.
- 3. Trim the fat. Internal marbling is a magnificent thing for meat heading to the grill, but large amounts of external fat will cause the flames to flare. Trim fat down to 1/4 inch or less. Try Grilled Flap Steak.
- 4. Use a cheap pair of long metal tongs. No fancy grips, no high-tech designs -- just durability and performance. Line cooks know. You can find them at restaurant-supply stores. Long tongs will come in handy when you're flipping Grilled Spanish Mustard Beef.
- 5. Don't oil vegetables before you grill them. Excess oil will drip and vaporize, causing that terrible "gasoline" aftertaste everyone hates. Instead, wipe the grates with a little oil, grill those veggies first, and then drizzle with oil (or other dressing). Try this technique with Mexican Grilled Corn.
- 6. Don't wear an apron. Keep a few old t-shirts around if you're really worried about stains, but no one, repeat no one, ever looked cool grilling in a apron. Unless it's one of those "Kiss the Cook" aprons. Those are fine. Go apron-free, if you dare, when you make Barbecue Chicken.
- 7. NEVER offer unsolicited advice when someone is grilling. It's simply not done. Insulting your grill master host that way is much worse than eating dry chicken. (By the way, don't overcook the chicken.)
